Armenia is holding a referendum on dissolving the country's top court. Now the "yes" campaign has an anthem, written by the prime minister himself.

An upcoming referendum in Armenia may be on a prosaic topic: the composition of Armenia's top court. But the "yes" campaign for the election has gotten off to a poetic start, with an anthem written by Prime Minister Nikol Pashinyan himself.

On February 27, Pashinyan posted on his Facebook page a video for the song I Say Yes. It comes as he begins to formally rally support for a referendum that he called earlier in the month to dissolve the Constitutional Court, which is packed with judges loyal to the former authorities.
