The European Commission has launched public consultations on its long-awaited Digital Services Act package, and at the same time called for feedback on the possibility of a new competition tool to address market imbalances in different sectors, including digital.

In terms of the Digital Services Act, six areas will be broadly examined in the consultations opened on Tuesday (2 June), which will solicit feedback from stakeholders on online safety, liability, market dominance, online advertising and smart contracts, issues surrounding self-employment online, and the potential future governance framework for online services.
