Labour demand in Croatia showed the first signs of recovery in May, following a sharp drop in April as a result of the coronavirus outbreak but its levels are still far below those before the pandemic, a local think-tank said.

In May, the seasonally-adjusted Online Vacancy Index (OVI) index developed by the Institute of Economics, Zagreb (EIZ) was up 40.6% compared to April, but still 57.4% below the value of May 2019, EIZ said in a statement on Tuesday.
