The U.S. must take aggressive steps to combat China's unfair trade practices while also investing in American manufacturing to return production to the country, said Gina Raimondo, President Joe Biden's nominee for Commerce secretary.

China has clearly behaved in ways that are anti-competitive – dumping cheap steel and aluminum into America, which hurts American workers and hurts the ability of our companies to compete, Raimondo, who has served as governor of Rhode Island since 2015, said Tuesday at her confirmation hearing before the Senate Commerce Committee.

If confirmed, she said, I plan to be very aggressive to help Americans compete against the unfair practices of China.
