Aung San Suu Kyi, who led Myanmar until the military seized power in a coup in February, is set to face more corruption offences just days before she is due to go on formal trial.

The state-run Global New Light Of Myanmar said the fresh allegations, which come on top of a string of other charges, followed the Anti-Corruption Commissions investigation into the Daw Khin Kyi Foundation.

She was found guilty of committing corruption using her rank, the paper said. So she was charged under Anti-Corruption Law section 55.
