The Kazakhstan Institute for Strategic Studies (KazISS) held an expert meeting on March 20 to discuss the preliminary results of the countrys parliamentary election, expected changes and the countrys development prospects.

According to Yerkin Tukumov, KazISS director , Kazakhstan is set to have a new, more pluralistic parliament.

Six of the seven parties passed the [five percent] threshold to enter the Mazhilis. Since 1995, this is the most diverse and widely represented Mazhilis with various political parties, he said.
