Former Ukraine Foreign Minister Dmytro Kuleba has no hope that U.S. President-elect Donald Trump can broker a peace deal.

In a wide-ranging and pessimistic interview with POLITICO, Kuleba insisted that Russian President Vladimir Putin was in no mood to strike a deal, and said Trump instead risked collapsing Ukrainian front lines if the new U.S. administration starved Kyiv of weapons.

Kuleba also questioned the resolve of Ukraine's Western partners particularly Germany, which awaits early elections and complained that while Russia has managed to find allies such as North Korea to send troops, Kyiv's allies have been inconsistent and unreliable on arms support.
