President Recep Tayyip Erdoğan emphasized the significance of the recent understanding reached in peace negotiations between Armenia and Azerbaijan, stressing Türkiye's continued support for efforts aimed at fostering development and stability across the South Caucasus through a win-win approach as he held a meeting with Armenian Prime Minister Nikol Pashinyan in Istanbul on Friday.

During high-level talks in Istanbul, the sides discussed key regional developments, including the normalization process between Türkiye and Armenia, broader peace and dialogue efforts in the South Caucasus, and current issues affecting the region.

President Erdoğan reiterated Türkiye's readiness to support any constructive initiatives to advance peace and cooperation. He also said Türkiye is committed to using every diplomatic tool to help establish lasting stability not only in the Caucasus, but across the wider region.
