Turkmenistan and Afghanistan have signed an agreement and contract to implement an investment project aimed at expanding the infrastructure of the Turgundi dry port in Afghanistans Herat province, Trend reports via Afghanistans Ministry of Public Works.

The project, with an initial investment of $5 million provided by Turkmenistan, includes constructing warehouses and developing new loading and unloading facilities to enhance cargo handling along the Turgundi-Herat railway line. The upgraded infrastructure will facilitate more efficient trade and transit operations.

Although the investment is coming from Turkmenistan, construction and operational works will be carried out on the territory of Afghanistan under local laws. The revenues generated from the port will be used to return the investment to the Turkmen partners.
