The European Commission has confirmed that Turkmenistan could play a role in the EUs gas diversification efforts through the Southern Gas Corridor, a source in the Commission told Trend.

According to information, EU-Turkmenistan energy relations are framed by the 2008 memorandum, which supports collaboration on energy security, infrastructure of mutual interest, renewable energy, and energy efficiency. A bilateral working group has been established to facilitate regular dialogue, particularly on natural gas.

The Commission emphasized that while decisions on specific infrastructure projects are made by companies and national authorities, Turkmenistans plans to increase gas supplies may contribute to the EUs goals of energy diversification via the Southern Gas Corridor.
