Tehran Times (17 August 2025)

Writing in Armenias state-run Armenpress News Agency on the eve of President Masoud Pezeshkians two-day visit to Armenia and Belarus, Araghchi underlined the deep historical ties between the two nations and expressed Tehrans readiness to usher in a new chapter of friendship. He stressed that closer cooperation will undoubtedly bring greater prosperity and security for both nations, the region, and beyond.

The future of relations between Iran and Armenia is very bright, and no one can divert this path, he asserted.

Araghchi highlighted the strong economic foundations of bilateral relations, saying that despite unfair unilateral sanctions, Iran has remained one of Armenias most important trading partners. He described this as proof of mutual confidence and said the two economies are highly complementary, offering countless opportunities for growth and development that can benefit both sides.
