The Eurasian Economic Union (EAEU) has grown into a major center of economic activity over the past decade, Kyrgyzstan's top government official said Friday (15 August).

Adylbek Kasymaliev, chairman of the cabinet of ministers, told an expanded session of the Eurasian Intergovernmental Council that the bloc has signed seven trade agreements and is building ties with key economic groupings in Eurasia and beyond.

"In the context of global transformation, it is necessary to turn the EAEU into a harmoniously developed pole of the multipolar world by 2030, ensuring a high level of technological progress and public welfare. We are ready to create all necessary conditions for this," he said.
