India and the European Union have held their first joint counterterrorism training aimed at protecting critical infrastructure and soft targets from emerging threats posed by unmanned aerial systems (UAS) and drones, according to an official statement.

The training took place from Oct. 13 to 15 in Haryana, northern India, and brought together senior officers and experts from Indias National Security Guard (NSG) and the EUs High Risk Security Network (HRSN).

The network, a specialized European platform of 28 units from 21 EU member states, and focused on the use of advanced UAS and counter-UAS (C-UAS) capabilities, the statement added.
