Not so long ago, in 2020, the European Union was funding mine relief efforts in Lebanon and hoping to see an anti-personnel mine-free world within five years.

HALO Ukraine, an EU-supported organisation, had already been making tangible change, removing explosives from Ukrainian soil since 2016.

In Chad, the EU-funded project PRODECO, was reintegrating anti-personnel mine victims into society through long-term medical care and rehabilitation, as well as supporting demining efforts.
