Japan and Indonesia on Tuesday agreed to enhance cooperation in resilient energy supply chains, including liquefied natural gas, as well as disaster prevention, according to Japanese media.

This came as Japanese Prime Minister Sanae Takaichi and Indonesian President Prabowo Subianto held talks in the Japanese capital Tokyo, focusing on economic and security cooperation, Kyodo News reported.

Takaichi said the two leaders also affirmed their countries close alignment in addressing the situation in the Middle East during a joint news conference after the talks, the report noted.
