In a sweeping diplomatic push in Baku, Georgia and Azerbaijan have signed a landmark package of energy and transport agreements, cementing a partnership set to shape the South Caucasus corridor for decades to come.

The signing ceremony, held during Georgian Prime Minister Irakli Kobakhidze's official visit to Baku, marked a pivotal moment in bilateral relations. A comprehensive suite of agreements covering natural gas supply, electricity transit, oil pipeline operations and railway connectivity was finalised between Georgia's Minister of Economy and Sustainable Development, Mariam Kvrivishvili, and her Azerbaijani counterparts, witnessed by Prime Minister Kobakhidze and Azerbaijani President Ilham Aliyev.

These agreements are of landmark importance in the relations between Georgia and Azerbaijan, Prime Minister Kobakhidze told journalists in Baku. They are related to the deepening of economic and energy partnership.
