Kyrgyzstan has signaled interest in taking part in the Central Asia-Azerbaijan Green Energy Corridor, a regional initiative aimed at expanding renewable electricity links across the Caspian region.

The issue was discussed during a meeting between Azerbaijan's Energy Minister Parviz Shahbazov and Kyrgyzstan's Energy Minister Taalaibek Ibraev on the sidelines of Baku Energy Week on June 1.

The ministers said the project would help integrate regional energy systems, strengthen energy security, and facilitate access to new markets for electricity generated from renewable sources.
