President Kassym-Jomart Tokayev invited United States President Donald Trump to visit Kazakhstan during a phone call on July 10 that focused on bilateral economic cooperation, political engagement and nuclear nonproliferation, the Akorda press service reported.

Tokayev congratulated Trump on the 250th anniversary of U.S. independence, noting that the country had become a powerful global state within a relatively short historical period.

During the conversation, Tokayev said the common sense policy underpinning the domestic agenda of the U.S. administration is consonant with Kazakhstans strategy of building a Just Kazakhstan based on the principles of law and order. He expressed support for Trumps policy.
