China's foreign trade maintained strong momentum in the first half of 2026, underscoring the resilience of the world's second-largest economy despite lingering global uncertainties.

Data released by the General Administration of Customs on Tuesday showed that the country's total goods trade reached 25.47 trillion yuan ($3.75 trillion) between January and June, up 16.9% year on year.

In June alone, total imports and exports climbed 24.2% from a year earlier to 4.78 trillion yuan, marking the 17th consecutive month of growth.
