Russia continues to regard Armenia as a brotherly country and therefore cannot remain indifferent to political developments there, Russian Foreign Ministry spokeswoman Maria Zakharova said during a briefing.

Commenting on what she described as a new wave of pressure against opposition political forces and figures in Armenia, Zakharova said Russia does not interfere in the internal affairs of sovereign states, including Armenia or the activities of its law enforcement agencies.

We continue to regard Armenia as a brotherly country, with a people with whom we are connected by special relations formed over centuries. Therefore, we cannot remain indifferent to the political processes taking place there, especially when they are, in one way or another, conducted under slogans connected with bilateral relations with our country, Zakharova said.
