Frances far-right duo are working to paper over their differences ahead of next years presidential election.

Jordan Bardella spent months preparing to replace Marine Le Pen as Frances far-right presidential candidate. Now he has a different challenge: falling back in line behind her.

In just a few days, the two leaders of the National Rally have struck competing notes on sensitive issues, from pensions and the high-profile departure of a top adviser to a long-standing proposal by Le Pen to ban hijabs.
