Radoslav ALEXANDROV and Desislava KOLEVA

What is remarkable is that Ukraine and Moldova, despite finding themselves in a very tense situation regarding their security, are extremely keen to move closer to the EU and have therefore already begun negotiations and opened the first cluster.

These are the words of the deputy director of the European Council on foreign relations (ECFR), Vesela Cherneva, and they come just as the official negotiation process for the two countries accession to the European Union has begun.

With this, the EU embarked on a truly geopolitical enlargement □ driven not only by the pursuit of shared values, a larger market, and stronger common institutions, but also by the need to safeguard the continents security in a shifting environment.
