State-owned enterprise Navoiyuran and Japans Marubeni Corporation have discussed the potential introduction of digital technologies and artificial intelligence solutions into uranium mining operations. A working online meeting between representatives of the companies took place on 2 November 2026, Navoiyurans press service reported.

Marubeni subsidiary Dolbix Consulting, which specialises in developing digital and technological solutions, also took part in the talks.

The discussions focused primarily on improving operational efficiency through the use of modern technologies. The parties considered ways to optimise production processes, improve the operation of technological equipment, digitalise wells and automate the processing of productive solutions.
