South Korea and the US conducted joint aerial resupply drills Tuesday to strengthen their ability to deliver military equipment and supplies when ground transport routes are disrupted during wartime, the allies' combined forces said.

Led by the South Korea-US Combined Forces Command (CFC), the exercise focused on rapid airborne logistics operations using military transport aircraft, Yonhap News Agency reported, citing a CFC statement.

The drills involved airdropping heavy military equipment and lighter supplies from altitudes exceeding 3,000 meters (9,843 feet), including round-the-clock operations under varying conditions.
