China, Japan and South Korea discussed growing geopolitical disruptions and their impact on regional stability during the 29th ASEAN Plus Three Summit in Manila on Tuesday, calling for stronger cooperation to address shared challenges.

Philippine President Ferdinand Marcos Jr., who chairs the Association of Southeast Asian Nations (ASEAN), warned that disruptions thousands of miles away were affecting East and Southeast Asia through rising food and energy prices, highlighting the immediate impact of global economic shifts on people across the region.

Opening the summit, Marcos called for the benefits of regional cooperation to be "tangible and reach our peoples with the same urgency," saying the partnership could provide "greater security today and confidence for tomorrow."
