After the opposition Student Lists historic victory over the long-ruling Serbian Progressive Party, newly elected MPs gathered for the new parliaments constitutive session.

After 14 years, six parliamentary elections and an equal number of terms of parliament in which the Serbian Progressive Party, SNS, and its coalition partners, held a majority of seats, a new legislature is being constituted on Tuesday.

In the new parliament, the Student List, formed by the student movement that led mass protests for almost two years against the rule of the SNS, which secured a landslide victory in the October 25 elections, will have an absolute majority.
