Sunday was the fourth anniversary of the landmark Shusha Declaration that upgraded Turkish-Azerbaijani ties to the level of alliance. The two countries now navigate a future with further cooperation from energy to defense.

Four years ago, Türkiye and Azerbaijan opened a new chapter in their deep-rooted ties. President Recep Tayyip Erdoğan and Azerbaijani President İlham Aliyev signed the Shusha Declaration in the eponymous city of the Caucasus country, one year after Shusha was liberated from occupying Armenian forces through a landmark offensive in Karabakh. The declaration elevated the status of relations between the two countries that boast being one nation, two states due to their Turkic heritage, to the level of alliance.

Today, the alliance stands strong as emphasized in a recent trilateral summit between Türkiye, Azerbaijan and Pakistan, another key partner for the two countries.
