Chinese firms have committed $80 billion in overseas investments in clean technology since last year, according to a report released Monday by the Australian research group Climate Energy Finance (CEF).

In the October 2024-25 period, Chinas position as "the dominant global investor in clean-energy manufacturing and infrastructure" was "consolidated" with its $80 billion worth of investments in disclosed new projects across 26 countries, according to the report.

Geographically, Southeast Asia remains the primary manufacturing hub, led by Indonesia and Malaysia, "underscoring the regions increasing economic integration with China," it added.
