Thailand and China agreed Monday to establish a new 2+2 dialogue mechanism bringing together their foreign and defense ministers, as the two countries moved to deepen strategic cooperation in security, trade, technology and regional connectivity.

The agreement was reached during talks between Chinese Premier Li Qiang and Thai Prime Minister Anutin Charnvirakul in Beijing, according to statements from the Thai Prime Minister's Office.

Li said China was ready to work with Thailand to strengthen mutual political trust, expand practical cooperation and advance the building of a China-Thailand community with a shared future.
